

Housing Discrimination Based on Disability is ILLEGAL

Under federal Fair Housing laws, it is illegal to discriminate in the sale, rental, or financing of housing based on disability, race, color, national origin, religion, sex/gender, and familial status. California law adds protections based on sexual orientation, marital status, source of income, or any other arbitrary reason such as age or immigration status.

Fair Housing laws make it illegal to:

- Refuse to rent or sell a home to a person because that person has a disability.
- Refuse to make a reasonable accommodation in policies or practices for a disabled person.
- Refuse to permit a reasonable modification for a disabled person.

A person with a disability is an individual who:

- Has a physical or mental impairment that substantially* limits one or more major life activities, like seeing, breathing, working, self-care, or performing manual tasks (*California law defines disability as merely an “impairment that limits”), or
- Has a record of such an impairment, or
- Is regarded as having a physical or mental impairment.

Fair Housing laws also require that newer multifamily buildings maintain common areas and facilities that are accessible to people with disabilities and that interior units are designed to meet certain accessibility requirements, such as sufficient room for a wheelchair to maneuver.

REASONABLE ACCOMMODATIONS & MODIFICATIONS FOR PEOPLE WITH DISABILITIES

Definitions

Reasonable Accommodation:

A change in a housing provider's rules, policies, practices or services that is necessary to provide a person with a disability an equal opportunity to use and enjoy her home

Reasonable Modification:

A physical alteration of the interior of the existing premises that is necessary to provide a person with a disability an equal opportunity to use and enjoy his home

An accommodation or modification is “reasonable” if it does not:

- Impose an undue financial and administrative burden on the housing provider;
- Require a fundamental alteration in the nature of the housing provider's services; or
- Create a direct threat to the health or safety of others.

Rights & Responsibilities

Tenants:

- Are responsible for making the initial request for an accommodation or modification, either verbally or in writing.
- Do not have to reveal a specific diagnosis, but must explain (1) how their physical or mental impairment limits a major life activity, and (2) how the requested change in policies or practices will mitigate the effects of their disability.
- Must pay the cost associated with a reasonable modification in privately owned housing, but not if the housing is federally funded. Tenants may not be charged the cost of structural modifications necessary to bring a complex into compliance with Fair Housing Act accessibility requirements.

Housing Providers:

- May ask for verification from a knowledgeable third party that (1) a tenant is disabled if the disability is not obvious or apparent, and (2) as a result of a disability, the tenant requires the accommodation requested.
- May decline to make an accommodation that would impose an undue financial and administrative burden, constitute a fundamental alteration in the nature of services provided, or pose a direct threat to the health and safety of others. However, even if the request is deemed unreasonable, a housing provider is obligated to engage in an interactive process to try to reach an alternate accommodation.

Examples

Examples of Reasonable Accommodations

- Permitting an assistance animal in a building with a “no pets” policy
- Allowing a tenant with a mobility impairment to transfer to a ground floor unit
- Extending the time to move for a tenant with severe physical and/or mental disabilities
- Reserving a parking space close to the building for a tenant in a wheelchair
- Holding a homeowners' association meeting in a physically accessible location

Examples of Reasonable Modifications

- Widening a doorway to allow wheelchair access
- Installing ramps
- Installing grab bars in bathrooms
- Removing or lowering kitchen or bathroom cabinets for people who use wheelchairs
- Installing flashing doorbells for tenants with hearing impairments
